The involvement of polyamines in the early development of mouse embryo was studied. The amount of putrescine, spermidine and spermine in the embryonic tissues, placenta and ectoplasmic cells, respectively, was studied. The polyamines were accumulated at the early stages of mouse embryogenesis (days 7-10). Furthermore, polyamine concentrations in ectoplasmic cells correlated with the rate of cleavage of embryo. In vivo treatment of the embryonic cells with the ornithine decarboxylase inhibitor alpha-methyl ornithine resulted in an inhibition of polyamine accumulation and development. The data obtained demonstrate that polyamines are involved in embryonic development at the early stages of embryogenesis.Q: Why is the number of factors of $n^2 + n$ is odd?
