New Headway: Pre-Intermediate Fourth Edition: Teacher's Book +. The Teacher's Book of New Headway Pre-Intermediate Fourth Edition. Etymology The name "Headway" may derive from "Hod-way" which is a road constructed for horses as opposed to a road constructed for motor vehicles. "Headway" may also derive from the "Head-way", referring to the distance between "the head and the rest of the body", thus making "Headway" into an activity, viz., to overcome perceived difficulties in learning a language. Origins of The Headway Method The Headway Method was originally introduced by E. H. Bates and the method remains his sole legacy. It was first published in 1920, as a book called The English Grammar or The Head-way System of Speech. It is not known when the name "Headway Method" was first applied to the method. The books were sold as an absolute "head-to-head" system of learning a foreign language and, being firmly established as such by Bates himself in the 1920s, the method may be said to have taken on this name. "Headway" may also be interpreted as an idiomatic expression, implying not only "the head" but also "best practice" or "the leading edge of a topic". The method was then called by Bates, Headway, the Headway System and various other names. The term "method" is used today to refer specifically to the work of Bates. Use of The Headway Method At the time of its introduction, the method was not considered to be particularly suitable for people who had a late age of onset. It was thought that people starting to learn English at an older age, for example, from the 1920s to the 1950s, had not already learnt an adequate amount of grammar. It was soon realised, however, that there were people who had learnt English as a second language in their childhood from the 1920s onward. Other scholars too pointed to the fact that the Headway Method was particularly suitable for those who had an early age of onset as opposed to those who were not able to join the method at an early age. The Headway Method is therefore a very effective method of learning for 570a42141b
