What makes Photoshop different from other image editors? Photoshop was the first raster image editor to become popular, and it's the forerunner of the non-linear editing systems that dominate in the industry today. However, unlike photo-editing programs such as Apple's Aperture or iPhoto that focus on editing photos and the like, Photoshop was designed to be the end-all, be-all of editing raster images. There are a lot of different ways to edit raster images. For many years, the only way to edit images was with one of the photo-editing programs, which required you to find and load the original raster image. Now, thanks to the advent of Photoshop's Layered and History capabilities, you can work on layers, trim them, blend them, flip them, and shape them with tools.

Photoshop's History features will let you see at a glance what you've changed and where it ended up in the file. You can do complex edits with the image history. Keep this in mind when learning Photoshop, since it's a full-fledged editing program in itself and it can take a while to adjust to how it works. Adobe Photoshop CC 2021 Features Adobe Photoshop CC 2021 is the latest release of the program. It was officially launched on December 17, 2018. Adobe has released several new features and other updates to the application with its new version. In this article, we'll look at the features that Photoshop CC 2021 brings to the table as well as some of its other interesting features. 1. Photoshop Compatibility Mode Photoshop's classic look and feel won't always be enough for users' Photoshop needs. In some cases, features found in some of the more modern, third-party photo editor applications have become essential for users of the application. Adobe is doing its best to keep up with these preferences and other design changes with the release of Photoshop CC 2021. In a nutshell, Photoshop CC 2021 has an improved compatibility mode that puts the application back to its "classic" look and feel. This mode essentially lets Photoshop look and act like Photoshop CS6 or earlier. Essentially, it lets users work on images in just the way they did in early versions of the program. As an added bonus, it also grants "old" users the ability to completely change the interface to that of previous versions of Photoshop.

Q: assignment char array value gets assigned to char * pointer value Why char s[] = "Hello World"; char p = s; p = "Hi there"; gives an error for the line with error saying pointer being used as array element? how to make it right? thanx A: When you do this p = "Hi there"; You are assigning to a memory that used to contain the address of the first element of the char array s. The array s itself, however, has not changed. A: Because s is a character array, s[0] and s[1] are char. You cannot assign a string literal to char*. If you want to change s array, you should do this: strncpy(s,"Hi there",sizeof(s)); or char s[]="Hi there"; EDIT char p=s; p[0]='a'; p[1]='h'; is the method you should use, s not changed, but character value at first(char) of it is changed. The AIA Gold Medal has been awarded for the third time in 2016 for the highest achievement in Landscape Architecture, based on the significant contribution to the built environment of an architect or firm. This year, the prize was awarded to German architect Detlef Schmitz for his efforts to develop standardised, replicable and reproducible construction techniques. Schmitz's innovations enabled the creation of large-scale, multi-functional and sustainable building types. In South Africa, the most promising and innovative example is the South-East Centre for the arts, situated in Cape Town, which uses the flood and stormwater protection techniques developed by Schmitz. The Gold Medal was presented to Schmitz, in an acceptance speech, at the awards dinner, held at the AIA Johannesburg offices on 13 October. The other finalists were Thomas Lawton from the US, for his urban development in Seattle, Washington, and Peter Müller from Germany, for his parks for the city of Esslingen-Brant, in Germany. The International Landscape Architecture Foundation (ILAF), based in Switzerland, and the American Academy of Landscape Architects (AALA) established the Landscape Architecture Award. In 2014, the inaugural Medal and an ILAF capital prize were awarded in the same year. The prize was presented for the second time in 2016. In 2015, Lawrence Babbio from the US was the recipient. Nodule formation in transgenic plants over-expressing urokinase, the urokinase receptor and uPA. We show that over-expression of the urokinase receptor (uPAR) or urokinase (uPA) induces the formation of cytoplasmic aggregates that resemble tumour nodules in a plant model system. Aggregates were detected in the intercellular space and in association with the endoplasmic reticulum and the plasma membrane of plant cells after uPAR or uPA over-expression. Over-expression of uPAR or uPA did not change the enzymatic activities of their respective proteins, but over-expression of both receptors together resulted in an increased formation of insoluble urokinase. Our results suggest that the urokinase receptor and urokinase med
