Unless...your air conditioning fails and you wake up to a miserable hot summer day. "Air Conditioning Breakdown" is a great game about the inevitability of spending a long hot summer in a stifling business suit. In order to take a break from the hellish atmosphere of the office, our unsuspecting hero heads home for a cool vacation in the refreshing atmosphere of the great American Southwest. Strange though it may seem, this is the first time anyone has found their way to the home of the famous "do-not-stir" pie. They start to fix the air conditioner, knowing that they will very soon have to take off again to the office. During the course of a few days, our hero will see all sorts of things while putting his air conditioning system back together. Will he be able to get home and take a "shortcut" through the desert? Like many hill ranges in Scotland, cricket was first played in the Scottish borders in 1824. The early border games were played on the flat ground to the north of the town of Bridge-of-Beaver in the Parish of Jedburgh (Jedburgh, Scottish Borders). The games were played under the auspices of a local gun club. In October 1926 they were moved to the former farm of Donaldson's in Springbank and renamed Jedburgh Sports Club. From then on it has prospered. In 1962 this facility was renamed the Northern Shooting Club. Its position was further enhanced when it was purchased and opened by the Rangers Charity Trust in 1994. The Centre is licensed for use by the Auld Firm. During the Second World War the range was used by the British army. A monument to this event, dedicated to the brave men who were involved in the conflict, was erected here on the site of the old tea house. The wall, plaques and other memorials were designed by Ed Walsh, who made the national and local history book, and the inscription was created by Kenneth McAliskey. Both sports have continued to flourish on this site during the last 50 years. The famous Border clay pigeon contest has survived the changes in government and continued to grow. The club hosts two world championships, the famous clays and the 10m Championship shoot where on the average more than 40,000 birds are dispatched. The old target range at the back of the range has been converted into a new, modern clay range. The first successful clay shoot in Ireland took place in August 1895 at Blair Thistle, Tyrone. The first club in Ireland to organise competitive clay shooting was the Dublin Shooting Club, established in November 1895. The first annual championship was held that same year. More than 2,500 shooters attended to compete for a remarkable total of £7,948. This fantastic level of game reflects the history and popularity of the sport in Ireland. The world of shooting has changed considerably since the early

What's new:

Thursday, 19 August 2013 First off, thanks to everyone for a brilliant Year Twelve so far. I'll share my thoughts on it later, but to get the ideas going I thought I'd write a bit about certain changes to the Club this year. A few months ago, I attended a debate at the football club of which I am a governor and a member of staff. The debate was on the issue of the new football club's youth department, set up to train young players. I had some views on the club at the time, they could be seen here, and one of the points I raised was that the youth department was over-funded. The club had been approaching people to work in the department and pay them, and the only two people who said they would (after agreeing it would take a couple of years to get started) are a director of youth development from the club, and another director of football. Both want to get the job. The director of youth did talk about bringing an academic from Australia who would not only be able to teach the player management side of things but help plan the careers of the players coming through the system. The problem here remains cash and time. The schoolboy and age group players can train for hours and hours (or days) and burnout, but are too casual to invest time to research the best ways to play in the very complex professional game. So the director decided to approach a former professional for advice on how to best plan for and guide the youngsters. This would have cost a great deal of money and consultation time, so I had no problem with the proposal. We had come up with the idea of training the age group players before them to reduce the amount of playing time and the need to even think about manager development (in theory, I mean). This had worked to a point with some of the players (not very well). The director looked for a professional with experience in managing a young team, someone who might be around the kids several times a week, work them hard but with wise advice so as to not alienate the players. So I put forward the name of an ex-professional - the Director asked me who he was and I said that he had worked with my Dad and what he said would suit. Unfortunately, the replied 'I know him from years ago. There
