The products may include a wide range of items, such as automobiles, toys, computer hardware, furniture, appliances, and the like. The machines used to manufacture products may have a variety of configurations. For example, machines used to fabricate food products, such as hamburger patties, meatballs, sausages, and the like may have a food product feed system that feeds the food products into the machine. A variety of machines may be used to manufacture a product. For example, an extrusion machine may be used to manufacture a food product having a predetermined shape. The food product is fed into the extrusion machine, and the extrusion machine extrudes a web of material. The web is fed into a cutting machine, and the cutting machine cuts the web into individual slices of the food product. The slices may then be packaged in trays and shipped to stores and restaurants. The products manufactured by the machines are often sold to individuals or business entities, such as grocery stores, restaurants, and the like. A particular machine may be available to the individuals or the business entities. The individuals or business entities often have their own particular requirements and preferences for the products being manufactured. The particular requirements and preferences of the customers may vary from one machine to the next. Each machine may have a limited range of configurations to produce a certain type of product. Typically, the individuals or the business entities that purchase the products produced by a particular machine may have input their particular requirements and preferences to the particular machine during a selection process. The particular machine is then manually adjusted or configured based upon the input. This approach may be
