Palatogenesis is a complex developmental process that involves cranial tissue morphogenesis, craniofacial region outgrowth, and palate fusion. During these events, palatal shelves of the secondary palate develop from oral epithelium. Transcription factor Msh homeobox 2 (Msh2) regulates craniofacial morphogenesis by promoting bone, cartilage, and tooth development. However, the role of Msh2 in palatogenesis remains unclear. In this study, we used genetic approaches to examine the importance of Msh2 in palatogenesis. We found that Msh2^{-/-} mutant mice had cleft palate defects. The Msh2^{-/-} primary palate contained less bone, and there was a significantly larger cleft space bff6bb2d33

Two players face each other with "Littlestars". If the player who places the first one wins, they gain a certain point and can use it for position set-up on the game board, aiming to place your Littlestar at the most advantageous position.
