Hybrid-controller-mediated multi-degree-of-freedom distributed neuromotor rehabilitation system. A multi-degree-of-freedom (DoF) hybrid-controller-mediated rehabilitative system was developed to provide functional rehabilitation for more simultaneous dof. The system consists of the Z-axis adaptable controller, active orthosis, electronic algorithm module, and the multilateral electrical stimulation controller. The orthosis attaches to the incomplete arm to suppress the motion in some directions and generate controlled active, passive and resistive forces in other directions. The electronic algorithm module connects to the electrical stimulation controller to achieve the electrical stimulation, and connects to the implanted stimulator of the stroke patient. The performance of the system was evaluated in the laboratory by testing the depth and movement of the manipulated object. The angle of the instrumented end-effector, range of the manipulated object, and the time of the task were measured as the control parameters of experiments. The experiment results indicate that the hybrid system can work reasonably well to match the desired desirable control strategy. Replying to another user
