Afghanistan Says Populist Election Results Won't Be Recognized Afghan Says Populist Election Results Won't Be Recognized Published: Wednesday, November 20, 2001 KABUL, Afghanistan (Nov. 20) Afghanistan's President Hamid Karzai signaled his acceptance of the results of the country's first popularly elected leader, Osama bin Laden's foreign minister said Wednesday, even as the U.S. and allies cited evidence of fraud to say the vote would have to be rerun. The election of Karzai, a former Foreign Minister who is part of the former king's royal family, was a positive step toward reconciliation in the country, Osama told VOA's Persian language service from Europe. But bin Laden said the Western reaction to the vote was proof that the region's governments had lost the will to fight the Sept. 11 hijackers and their allies. Rival police groups have been at odds for weeks over the results of Tuesday's election, which were questioned by international observers who said a widespread fraud had taken place. Opposition candidates and observers have accused police of stamping ballots, rigging the vote count and rigging the results
