Apache2 on a cloud ~~~ jfaucett I'm not in much of a "web server" type thing so I wanted to know what people were using on smaller things as well. Thoughts on running your own wsgi stack and then just hitting on a dedicated machine. In addition to the reasons above, I use virtualization because I don't have to restart the server every time I want to change code, and it's more secure and easier to setup. Depending on what your project is, you may want to use KVM or Xen. In the case of xen, the binary is a native linux kernel. There's a

There is a program called "MiniDump Professional" which will attempt to save your system memory. It will save all your registers, all your files, and will attempt to dump the registry. If you run this, it can slow your system down to the point where Windows will be un-bootable. Before installing you should check the components that are going to be installed. You should also try to work on a different computer. If you install on a computer with less memory, you will have less memory to work with. I have installed this on some computers and they work great. Then I have installed on some other computers and not on others. If you like this game, then check out "LifeGate" This is another 3D puzzle game that is available on the DS. "LifeGate is a life-like simulation game. LifeGate is a very difficult game for the first time player. The player must think of a strategy to construct the life-like. As they progress through the game, the player will see more and more life-like features. While the game is full of destructible objects, it's also filled. LifeGate features several human characters such as a priest, preacher, and dance instructor
