Sun, 30 Jan 2015 05:45:00 -0500Contest Wrap-Up!

Hey guys, time for a bit of a wrap up from the contest :)

First off, the big winner was

The iOS favorite Android Warrior

We like all the entries and it was definitely a hard choice between this one and... ah...

The Android favorite Enderman

I know everyone loves androids, but in the end this one was the clear winner!

The most respectable Android player

Came in third place, and let's just say this guy doesn't need to be on our side :)

The proud Danish player of a little wizard

Hell yeah! This could be the short little paper clip machine that teaches you adorable little Viking children to slay goblins all day long....

There was also a lot of love for the cute spriggan and his adorable little Dwarf friend!

So the option for a

People are noticing a real change in Twitter's new logo. It's gone from looking like a jagged strand of a rainbow to almost looking like a smile. Check it out: By the way, over the past six months or so, every new logo has gotten a little bit more curly. This is the new one. Also of note: Twitter is testing some new logos at the time of this writing. Here's the one that's in use right now on the left. What do you think of it?

A former Canadian Forces reservist has been charged after he allegedly harassed the Canadian Armed Forces member who first reported the inappropriate contact. In a statement of claim, the complainant alleges that an individual they knew and trusted began to harass them on Facebook in November 2017, and that the accused continued to make numerous comments and messages, including a photograph of himself holding a sign with the complainant's name written on it. The accused also allegedly communicated with the complainant's friends and family, including private messages. 'An environment of fear' "At all times, the complainant was afraid of the social media harassment," reads the statement of claim. The statement adds that "perpetrators became emboldened" after several Canadian Armed Forces members told the complainant that they would no longer speak with them. Meanwhile, the complainant continues to deal with a hostile work environment, which has included comments about their appearance, and multiple allegations of sexual harassment, the statement says. "One example was a photograph in which the defendant asked the complainant why he was looking so sad," the statement reads. "The defendant described in graphic detail how he would like to rape the complainant and force him to perform oral sex on himself."

The accused was charged with two counts of sexual assault after the allegations were reported to a police officer on Nov. 27, 2017. Former reservist charged The former CF member who made the allegations has not been charged with any criminal offences. In a statement, the Canadian Forces said the alleged incident was reported to them in a way that prevented the investigation from moving forward. "Due to the specialized nature of the investigation required to pursue a case in the Criminal Justice System, with respect to that allegation, it was the view of the military that the matter would be better dealt with through the judicial system, and that the military would not be able to proceed," the statement
