Off! 3:00 pm to 4:30 pm This is for the Kitchen Table, We like to eat and we like to talk about whatever kind of food. We hope to hear interesting and funny stories about cooking and food. Hear from James and Lanie several times every month. 2:00 pm Performing Home State on the State Capitol Lawn in Albany He comes to drive, to motivate; He sees a problem, asks how to solve; When we find a stranger in need, He'll do what we do. Travel the world, but leave your heart at home. Let's live happily now. [cw] 1:50 pm Allied Arts People of Color Oral History Project: The End of the War at San Francisco State University On February 2, 1945, over 4,000 people gathered on San Francisco State University's (SFSU) Spartan Stadium field to celebrate the end of World War Two. This was the first of a series of 35 celebrated marches and parades and is widely regarded as the largest gathering of African American soldiers, veterans and other supporters, representing various ethnic groups, of the 4,000 African-American soldiers who served in the United States military during the Second World War. This is a video of the final march in the series, seen here projected with audio recorded with my iPhone. As political campaigns and parades go, this was high stakes. The very future of America depended on the new leadership of this growing generation of young Americans. In a few hours, they would be taking power from those who had been in charge at the start of the war, who were unprepared for, and hadn't stepped up to the challenge of enforcing a sprawling military-industrial complex that would go to war on a global scale with the future of the world in its hands. The choice was no longer between the future and the past. It was between survival and annihilation. The United States would prevail, but by the force of its youth. The crowd of over 4,000 dispersed into a crowd of over 15,000 the next day, for the victory parade. Each year, thousands more would gather and celebrate "Victory over Fascism" around the United States. Dancing to jazz music, they marched to the echoey streets carrying American flags and tobacco and cigarettes wrapped in paper decorated in the colors
