Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus for changing a battery charged with an alternating current (A.C.) voltage and supplying a battery voltage to a load, and more particularly to an apparatus for changing a battery having an output voltage of 12V, A.C., into a battery having an output voltage of 9V, A.C., while maintaining an output voltage of 9V, A.C. In the case of a battery chargeable at a charging current lower than the charging current of an A.C. power source, since an output voltage of the battery lowers with time, by controlling the charging current to be always lower than the charging current of the A.C. power source, the battery output voltage can be maintained at a constant voltage level. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, it is proposed that a direct ourrant (D.C.) turns or rechargeable misled that a direct current (D.C.) type or rechargeable nickelcadmium battery is used as a power source of electric cars. In this case, the battery having a D.C. output voltage of 12V, A.C., is directly charged with an A.C. voltage from an on-vehicle A.C. power source, thereby realizing a battery having a large capacity and a D.C. output voltage of 12V, A.C. For example, Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 4-226389 discloses a system in which an H-shaped charging circuit is used, and an A.C. charger charges a rechargeable battery by a battery charge and discharge control circuit. In this system, a battery can be charged at a charging current lower than the charging current of the A.C. power source, thereby prolonging a battery life and permitting maintenance of the output voltage of the battery in a stable state. However, the battery which is charged with an A.C.
