THE PRELUDE TO THE SWORD The system adopted by the game studio made it possible for the game to keep pace with the anime. In order to be able to tell stories, the action scenes were prepared beforehand. This creates the enormous scale of the game where you can constantly engage in a high-paced battle that arouses the emotions of the characters. Another highlight of the game is the extremely rich and deep character personality that goes beyond the game's setting and storyline. I do not like war in real life. This is a work that I want to play and that I want to connect to other players. I am not someone who likes to kill. Nor do I feel that the delight of killing is worth the pain. EXHIBITION LOCATION: The exhibition will be held at Katamata Station in the "Fruit City" theme park. Venue Map Event MapGoogle and Warner Bros. have a deal to integrate YouTube into movies and TV shows, similar to the one Netflix has with House of Cards. Sources say the deal is being negotiated with Google, which would take the place of OpenTV's YouTube service. OpenTV was bought by Sony for $500 million in 2010. OpenTV and GV's OTT service YouTube were rivals. It is unclear how this will be set up or who will pay who, but it is likely that Netflix and Google will both make money from ads on the new service, as both companies use advertising and both are huge sources of advertising on their own sites. You might expect the deal to be announced at next month's Sundance Film Festival, which is Google's showcase for new content. But Google often holds off until it is good and ready, so it could be several months before the online video service goes live. The project is being spearheaded by YouTube co-founders Chad Hurley and Steve Chen. There is a precedent: OpenTV was headed by former Time Warner exec Jeffrey Katzenberg and former Disney exec Chris Klein. If Google were to get a deal to YouTube in movies and TV it would be the first time that Google has been a direct distributor of content. While YouTube has been a digital sales and marketing platform for content producers since its inception, last year Google bought music site TuneIn for $75 million. Google acquired OpenTV in 2010 for $1.65 billion. At the time Google said it was interested in expanding its subscription
