In addition to stimulating maternal immunologic tolerance towards the fetus, fetal transplantation provides a model for understanding the immune basis of transplantation tolerance. Clinical transplantation tolerance occurs after transplantation of tissues which contain a high proportion of autologous bone marrow, such as fetal liver, thymus, or heart allografts. In contrast, tolerance of allografts from parental donors is generally lost. In this review we discuss the importance of fetal tolerance induction as a model for the development of tolerance towards allografts in the context of recent advances in the understanding of the mechanisms by which hematopoietic cells become unresponsive to alloantigens in the fetus and neonate. Finally, we discuss the basic immune mechanism behind fetal-induced tolerance and the prospect of its application to clinical transplantation.

Q: How to overrule exception when thread returns a value in thread.join() I have a thread inside of which I have an infinite loop that returns a byte[]. In this case the thread.join() will throw exception, but I don't want to throw exception, but wait for it to finish. I tried using Future.get() inside the while loop. It throws an exception, that the future is not
