"When the bride and groom are riding in the bike, and it's a special motorcycle wedding, I started doing that," says designer Naomi Ikeda, who shoots elaborate and extremely detailed models of bridal gowns on her specially decorated street bike. With beautiful and complex details, Ikeda's bike-modelled wedding dresses are elaborate and ethereal -- a juxtaposition of fashion and function in a way that isn't currently seen as often. "What I shoot on my bike is like model fashion shooting. I shoot every girl in a different way," Ikeda says. "On a bike, you can see the body -- you can see the lines, and see how a girl's shape is." Ikeda, who has been creating gowns for Japanese fashion houses since the 1990s, says that she started dreaming up bike-modelled wedding dresses after noticing more and more couples in love (and marriage) riding motorcycles. "I wanted to do something different," she says. "So I started doing this bike-modelling when I was 21 years old, and then I've been doing it for 17 years." (HuffPost) These motorcycle wedding dresses are taken to a new level by ornately veiling the bride's figure Sometimes Ikeda shoots a bride and groom from the side of their
