In a recent letter to the editor, Dr. Keith Herring writes that the debate over non-medical use of marijuana in North Dakota has been given "a new life by the proposed bill [House Bill 1443]." He asserts that "it is irresponsible to burden those who choose to use cannabis with unnecessary criminal sanctions" and that current legislation "simply permits marijuana use for medical purposes," something the voters of North Dakota support in 2012. While North Dakota's medical marijuana program has been in place since 2009, Herring's letter discusses issues we have heard only very recently from dispensary owners. We can't say that North Dakotans who choose to use medical marijuana have been getting an undeserved "burden" of marijuana prohibition. Rather, we've known since 2012 that the voters support this legislation and public support continues to grow. A recent Public Policy Polling poll in North Dakota confirms that 94 percent of likely voters support the medical marijuana initiative, with only one percent opposed. If we lived in a compassionate society, we would not turn this medication into a criminal enterprise. North Dakota's dispensaries have even filed a lawsuit seeking to protect medical marijuana, claiming the proposed legislation is unconstitutional and a waste of taxpayer money because of the exorbitant cost of running a state-approved medical marijuana dispensary. "It's wrong to consider legal medical marijuana the same as illegal recreational marijuana," said Kent Roach, co-owner of The Alternative Clinic in Fargo. "This is a legitimate business and it will create plenty of jobs for local residents." But, according to Herring, "North Dakota legislators should avoid having this debate until the measure passes," before such a move would violate "states' rights." This is not a medical marijuana bill, it is c9d1549cdd

This game is officially licensed by MAGURO and is not produced by any other company. Game play Introduction The ultimate goal of the game is to reach the north pole. If you win, you will get a swimsuit as a reward. You can also swim faster by holding the ↑ button down for a while. Each stage has a golden bell in front of the mountain that you have to cross. After the golden bell, the slopes will gradually get steeper. If you swim slowly you'll pass one of the bell easily. But if you have to swim slowly, you'll die before you reach the next golden bell. You don't want to die right? Of course you don't want to die! Unfortunately, you will not be able to complete the game without dying. The gold bells have a penalty system. If you swim past the golden bells too many times, you will be caught. If you are caught on a golden bell, your shooting speed will increase and you will lose your stamina. Once your stamina reaches zero, you will be disqualified and your game will be over. After all, when you can't swim the right way, you're better off just not to try at all. Story You are a MAGURO! At first, you will follow a wild animal called a dasak. In the past, all the monsters, humans and gods lived in harmony. However, our world has been destroyed by war, poverty and pollution. None of the gods or monsters can live without the people of Earth. There is no way for them to recover the earth. Humans are now fighting for the survival of the world, it is a WAR! When they are at war, everything gets messed up. People are killing each other, even the gods are falling for the sake of human arrogance. The whole world has been taken over by the greed of humans. When the human race has fully enslaved the world, the god of wind, called kwansei, decides to take his own revenge. One day he was shocked by the horrible results of their hatred and cruelty. What's new in Square Fast:

In this lesson, you get your first very brief look at Constructs, one of the Forgotten Realms' newest and most important Sorcerous elements. Constructs are a class of spell effect that creates creatures, magical constructs, and artifact constructs from materials laid out in front of you. In this lesson I'll quickly give you a look at Constructs and then I'll discuss what kinds of Constructs are for, how to use them to your advantage, and how Constructs from both Basic and Advanced Dungeons and Dragons vary significantly from the Constructs from third-party games that use that system. So Come Meet the Constructs Constructs are an incredibly powerful Sorcery. They're not cheap, and they cost their caster to prepare one. Constructs can do any kind of job: hazardous duty, spy, assassinations and more. They're a great answer to more powerful Monsters with a smaller number of hit points. If you've got a cheesy boss or a big boss that needs a stealthy approach, Constructs would be a great new face for that. Constructs are also useful when you want to utilize a boss for a storyline encounter (they can even make a bit of monster a side quest). Constructs aren't Sorcery that you can just cast on the go. Once you've used a Construct to cast a spell, the Construct is gone. If the spell has a limit of casting, you can't cast anymore. So you have to have a place to cast the Construct (i.e. near a fire), or a place where you want to begin your Construct, or a place where you can control the Construct. If you're having trouble controlling your Construct, maybe you should try a Prehensile Tail. Constructs are useful if you want to have a boss or even just an NPC to follow you around. A Construct is of a size and strength consistent with your caster level. If you're making a giant dragon, you don't want a Construct, which would be a bit smaller and weaker than what you're trying to make. Constructs can be either armored or unarmored. Armor isn't magical but the mass of the Construct does decrease slightly (about half) when Constructs are made unarmored so that's probably a bit of a good idea. Constructs can be made of any construction-type material, including potions. Potions may require an alchemist to prepare, make a Construct is an alchemist is allowed. If a
