AUSTIN (KXAN) – As the Austin City Council prepares to take up the new police contract with the Austin Police Association on Wednesday, leaders of the city’s Hispanic neighborhood leaders in East Austin are calling out the council over what they say will be the lack of representation of the many young Hispanic men the department continues to discipline. On the same day the contract is voted on, city leaders will hear the outcome of a racial profiling audit, commissioned by the city to look into racial discrimination cases filed against the department between 2011 and 2013. Nearly 85% of the complaints were filed by the department against young Hispanic men, according to the auditors. Three out of four were punished by officers, including one with a four-day suspension. “I was disgusted to see that report,” District 1 Council Member Ora Houston said. “It really tells me that the people we’re representing are being policed, and it’s based on the color of their skin.” While not everyone agrees it’s black or white, many say the statistics are very telling about the department’s culture. When a young Hispanic man is arrested in East Austin, he sees his mother, an immigrant from Mexico, get dragged through the system. She’s forced to hire an attorney, take days off work and ask for help from leaders of the community. She then has to pay tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees. “These are the type of things that our people face every day,” Eduardo Zavala of the Latino Voice Network said. “If you’re not arrested, they don’t really follow you.” East Austin activist Filippo Lozano says he hears stories about young people being stopped and harassed at schools, while police casually walk by a convenience store. He wants the council to do more to hold the officers accountable. “It starts from the top,” Lozano said. “The only way we can do that is to hold them accountable.” The council’s Public Safety Committee will consider the contract on Wednesday and a public hearing will be held on the contract on Thursday. “I don’t think the community got engaged early enough,” Houston said. The vote will be taken as a motion to approve the contract during the Public

A comprehensive program of anti-insulin treatment, involving changes in the type, dose, time and frequency of insulin treatment, causes a wide spectrum of metabolic and endocrine abnormalities. The subcutaneous fat layer, which is an organ contributing to regulation of glucose transport, metabolism, and thermogenesis (being itself the substrate for triglyceride synthesis), might play a major role in this complex multifactorial syndrome. Using rats, we have shown that under circumstances of adequate carbohydrate intake, the subcutaneous fat layer could be actively involved in regulation of serum insulin levels. In the next grant period, we intend to characterize subcutaneous fat layer and its relationship to serum insulin in the various stages of anti-insulin treatment in rats and dogs. We shall also investigate changes in the subcutaneous fat layer during fetal and post-natal development, and its relationship to the morphology, function, and life-span of islets of Langerhans. A working hypothesis of the cellular and molecular nature of “Langerhans-islet-fat layer” interactions is formulated and such hypothesis will be tested. Finally, we shall study the mode of action of diabetes-inducing agents (e.g., streptozotocin, cortisone acetate) as affecting both subcutaneous fat and islet function. 30 or more days and 0 to 10 days, respectively, and use the integer portion of N to test for dichotomous study variables. Data in the program are analyzed in the model tab. After checking the list of variables, click on “add,” and enter data into the model. At this point, the model may be customized with the “Conditional Formatting” option. A customizable table is built by clicking on “Data,” and the total number of failures is highlighted. 4. Using the same technique, you can record the value of any function. You can modify the default Excel setting for “Method in which Recall with Z-Score is recorded” by accessing the book setting via the Edit menu. For data entry, the start and stop values are coded in Excel. For the “Conditional Formatting” option, a raw recall with Z-score table is created.
