This game involves killing zombies while youâre riding the express train. It has a dark and mysterious setting.Nanowires have been prepared by chemical vapor deposition (CVD), as reported in "Chemical Vapor Deposition of Nanowires of Boron" by B. Baliga et al., Applied Physics Letters, Vol. 61, p. 9, February 1992. These layers of boron-containing compounds, which are converted to nanowires upon annealing, are not lattice matched to the substrates on which the nanowires are to be grown. It would be desirable to have free-standing boron-containing nanowires which are lattice matched to the substrates on which the nanowires are to be grown. Bulk high purity thin films of boron have been prepared by sputtering a boron target into a high purity argon atmosphere with or without magnetic field. As reported in "A1-B9 IV-III-V Semiconductor: Bulk, Thin-Films, and Nanocrystallites" by A. A. Balandin and E. S. Snow, 1998 Electronic and opto-electronic devices using boron-containing materials, pgs. 55-107, Santa Barbara, Calif., ctrl. pub. Whaling Press; pg. 95, it has been reported that stable AlAs nanostructures have been grown by metal organic chemical vapor deposition with the reactant gases combined in the presence of Al and As metal sources. Chemical vapor deposition (CVD) is a versatile process for the deposition of chemical compounds and mixtures of the compounds in the condensed phase on a substrate from a gaseous phase. The CVD process can be operated in the absence of, or in conjunction with, a thermal anneal. In the absence of a thermal anneal, the substrate can be heated indirectly, by a heated gas or by a resistive heater. The growth of the chemical compound occurs on the surface of the substrate in the vapor phase. The gas phase reactant compounds are introduced into the process chamber, and the conditions inside the chamber are chosen such that a thin, uniform, freestanding film of the chemical compound grows on the substrate. Various parameters such as the temperature, the pressure, the flow rate, and the residence time inside the chamber can be varied in order to grow thin films with a desired composition and morphology. It is often very
