* **Adobe PhotoDeluxe** is an excellent product that is used in this chapter as a great reference tool for editing images. You don't need PhotoDeluxe, but it is handy if you want to know more about editing and organizing images. PhotoDeluxe offers an excellent collection of reference images that can be useful for cutting and pasting and is a great tool for experimenting with different editing techniques. After playing with PhotoDeluxe you're ready to learn more about the Photoshop layers. ## Opening an Image As a general rule, you're going to want to open an image in a graphics application before you open it in Photoshop. Opening an image file in a graphics program provides a pre-cropped file that is ready to edit. When you save the image, Photoshop will begin working as you edit, so you can go back and modify your work in Photoshop if you have to. * **File formats:** Although many programs support almost any type of file format, you should save your image in a format that's compatible with Photoshop. * **Formatting:** You have different options to choose from depending on the size of your image. Large images most likely have different file types, but for your purposes, you can choose TIFF (tagged image file format, found in many graphics programs). If you want to find out more about different file types, check out the article "Understanding TIFF, GIF, PNG, and JPEG." ## Cropping and Resizing Images Before you can edit an image in Photoshop, you need to get it in a format that's compatible with Photoshop's editing features. As a general rule, the larger the size of the image, the more processing power you need to edit in Photoshop. You can crop an image to a certain preset size, known as the _crop window,_ or you can resize an image to a preset size and resolution, which is known as the _expand window._ The crop and resize options appear in the opening dialog box of the Image Bin window, as shown in Figure 2-1. FIGURE 2-1: You can choose to crop or resize an image.

Adobe Photoshop Elements is available for Microsoft Windows and Apple Mac OS X. There are currently two versions of Photoshop Elements: the 'Classic' version and the 'Essentials' version. Photoshop Elements Classic is available for Windows and Mac at $149.99 (USD), whereas Photoshop

Elements Essentials is available for Windows and Mac at $119.99 (USD). Photoshop Elements Classic cannot operate as an image editor without Photoshop. But, it includes many of the same features as professional-grade Photoshop. Unlike Elements, Photoshop Elements Essentials does not require a license for use. But, its features are limited. For those looking to edit images with Photoshop Elements: Under the Features tab in the Program's main menu, select 'Edit images.' The Image Preview window is the place where you make most of your editing decisions. It offers a variety of tools to zoom in, and out, or change the pixels of an image. You can also crop an image to remove unwanted areas from a photo. Crop tools include the Crop tool, the Rectangular Select tool, and the Straight Select tool. Adjusting the brightness, contrast, and colors of an image can be done with the Brightness, Contrast, and Clarity Adjustment Layer. You can create and apply filters to your image, such as an Invert Filter, or a Toy Camera or Slide Film filter. You can use the Stylize and Puppet Warp tools to add creative effects, such as a drop shadow, cartoonizing, embossing, or water effects to an image. It also includes the Annotate feature, which allows you to write text over an image, and the Healing Brush tool, which allows you to straighten out scratches, discolorations, or other blemishes in a photo. Photoshop Elements Classic features. Some of the more useful features are: Create layered PSD PSD files to import or export files into or out of Photoshop Elements. Create and save many types of compatible PSD files, including PSD files and Photoshop Elements.psd files. Save files in a variety of image formats, such as JPG, TIF, GIF, PNG, and JPEG. Edit and manipulate bitmap images with very large numbers of colors and pixel resolution. Create GIF animation frames. Create and edit a variety of animation effects. 05a79cecff

This exhibition brings together the work of 30 contemporary artists from across the country. This is the first show of its kind in the Peninsula to explore the topic of the 'us versus them' mentality. In an international press conference at the show, three of the artists – Alastair MacLachlan, Jason Donahue and Rose Hopley – spoke about their artwork. "In the end we have to learn how to be comfortable in our skins," said Donahue. "As an artist you've got to work with yourself in some way. And the concept of that is coming through that in my work." "I was recently at a family gathering and there was a squabble," said Rose Hopley. "The differences in our backgrounds, the problems we have between us are so great we're thinking that we're going to be at war. But we're not." Although Roberta Erskine, the curator of the exhibition, has been brought up in an us versus them environment, she says she's not afraid of discussing the topic. "It's a huge responsibility to open up such a difficult topic," she said. "But it's important that we can have these open and frank discussions. We want to make the most of the opportunity to have these discussions about what's actually important." The artists responded to the in-depth questions, and shared their personal thoughts about the 'us versus them' mentality and the way they might tackle this difficult topic. "It has to be done from a human level and make people think about it," said Hopley. "What we're doing is using art as an opportunity to start to imagine a positive future." Donahue agrees that the biggest problem is having these perceptions of a world that we can't change. "We all have our little group and we all form our opinions about who's bad and who's good and how certain things should be," he said. "But we don't need to jump to that and we're only making ourselves go to war." If we are to make a change it's down to ourselves. "I think we need to start on the inside," he continued. "As a society we have a lot of lessons to learn. We need to question our own beliefs." The exhibition is open from noon until 5pm from Saturday, May 19 until Sunday, July 29 at AsiaArt, 1194 Wellington St.,

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a coating apparatus for use in coating a substrate with a fluid or coating material. The substrate includes at least one surface and a coated surface formed on the substrate. 2. Description of Related Art The development of coating technologies enables the formation of several layers of material on the surface of an article. For example, a car body manufactured by a painting process can include layers of coating colors such as white, black, and red. Each layer typically includes a coating material such as a lacquer, a paint, and a sealant. Conventional coating technologies may be limited to applying only a single coating material layer on a substrate, while not being capable of applying more than one coating layer. Furthermore, the conventional coating technologies may be insufficient to form a surface having a desired pattern formed thereon. For example, it may be difficult to achieve coating having a desired pattern formed thereon by conventional coating technologies. U.S. patent application Ser. No. 10/733,894 filed on Dec. 6, 2003 and U.S. patent application Ser. No. 10/728,234 filed on Dec. 3, 2003 disclose examples of a coating apparatus for coating a substrate with a fluid. In the coating apparatus, a coating fluid is supplied from a coating fluid supply source to each of nozzles. At the same time, the supply source is temporarily stopped to suppress the fluctuation in pressure during a transient period. When the coating fluid supply is resumed, the supply of the coating fluid to the nozzles is temporarily stopped to suppress the fluctuation in pressure at the beginning of the supply of the coating fluid. Thus, the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles in a predetermined time. However, the operation of stopping the supply of the coating fluid may cause a streaky pattern formed on the surface of an article to vary in time. In the case of the coating apparatus disclosed in the above two applications, the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles in a predetermined period. Therefore, the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is approximately equal to the supply period. Accordingly, the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is insufficient to achieve a desired coating pattern. If the supply of the coating fluid is further prolonged so that the total time during which the coating fluid is supplied to the nozzles is approximately equal to the coating period, the total time during
