Electronic Devices and Circuits. Founded by David A. Bell, one of the world's leading experts in the field of electronic circuits. This is quite an unusual book. It is written in the form of a case study: that is, in the form of a sequence of letters, a diary, or a log. Of the 36 chapters, many of them dealing with specific topics, and containing quite a detailed set of examples, focus on the electronic components. Schafer, Mark A. 1996. Cambridge: Radiotechnique Corporation.The role of the insulin-like growth factor system in Barrett's oesophagus and in oesophageal adenocarcinoma. Insulin-like growth factors (IGFs) are widely expressed in many tissues and exert a number of growth stimulatory effects on epithelial cells. In oesophageal carcinogenesis, IGF-I and IGF-II are differentially expressed in relation to the histological and clinical parameters of the tumour. IGF-I and IGF-II mRNA and protein expression is low in the early stages of the carcinogenic process; low IGF-I expression is associated with the presence of neoplasia, and high IGF-I expression is related to an increased risk of oesophageal adenocarcinoma. IGF-II expression increases during the transition from dysplasia to adenocarcinoma, and is associated with a more aggressive tumour phenotype. The biological effects of IGFs in oesophageal carcinogenesis and the potential for their use as prognostic markers are discussed.#!/bin/sh # Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one or more # contributor license agreements.
