"ostriker," disalle says, "listened to the whole story of this flying saucer." in the "right environment," ostriker said, "by some strange happenstance," the "ufo phenomenon might take off." ostriker, who is now at ucla, believes that the u.s. military is capable of creating antimatter and antigravity devices, "which is why we have this long-standing secret aviation program." perhaps understandably, washington's secrecy about its ufos keeps the subject in the realm of paranoia. but the fact that the discipline is even an academic discipline at all is in a way a triumph for the "conventional wisdom." for the fact that it happens to be the case that some people believe in the phenomena is quite interesting, but certainly not a justification for trying to debunk it. like the belief of other educated people about the existence of santa claus, the existence of ufos can be taken as emblematic of people's previous beliefs. in his book on science and popular culture, the amateur scientist, biologist and journalist david k. ingraham writes about his visit, as a teenager, to a new jersey state correctional facility for teenage delinquents, where he was struck by the fact that "about half the kids had seen or heard [of] flying saucers." many of them would talk about it nonchalantly, ingraham quotes one as saying, "they don't exist. "the other half"—the one that ingraham talked to—"said, 'i don't believe in them, but it's great to hear these kids talking about it.'" one cannot help wondering about the relationship of that attitude to the way that washington perceives the ufo phenomenon. addendum: some of my own college days are reflected in the footnote to this post. when i was in my early twenties, i worked at a newspaper where we were part of a chain owned by hearst, and i remember that the hearst chain was one of several that had a huge ufo section on their front page—as an entry in the big circulation contest.
