Europa Navigation (RMC) Digital Road Map Europe

the development of network-based navigation systems by audi has made a commitment to the responsible use of the collected data. audi is a member of the european group for electronic road data for mobility and transport (e-gedm) . audi is also a member of the open location code (olc) initiative and therefore maintains the specifications for the open location code standard. the audi system is currently released for the olc specification version 2.0. but the audi system works on any version of the standard. the combined use of the audi system and the olc standard allows the interoperability of the systems of different manufacturers. the ability to delete stored map routes enables road users to store their favorite routes in the navigation system. the navigation+ service provides an overview of the stored route list. pressing the delete button removes all routes from the list. in addition, all routes are set for permanent deletion once the button is pressed. at the moment, florida does not use any kind of highway identification systems. it is not even referred as “highway” and there is no name for the divisions of these types of roads. our closest comparison would be a street. if you can look for a number, a street sign or a two-digit number, this is a highway. also, there is no “state road” what is “state road” in europe? or even a “main st.” name. instead, there are names for each street, which correspond to the town they go through. today we are launching an updated version of the digital road map europe project website. the new website has more open and interactive elements, and is a reflection of our commitment to supporting and growing the europa navigation (rmc) digital road map brand and our vision of engaging the european public. the website is currently available in english, french and italian. 5ec8ef588b
