when i was working through the preparation tasks for the grammar access program, i decided to get another program to help me with examples. this program is grammarly. it is an online tool. it can check your written work for you so you don't have to fix it yourself. it gives you word suggestions that help you improve the way you construct your sentences and so on. i signed up for the program for free and i've been using it for a while. it's good to be able to use one program to do my prep work in one place and to use the other to check my work. the game introduces students to structure by asking them to build a sentence based on three photos. each photo shows a different situation that an object could be in. players may need to find or make words such as animal, part of the body, color, letter, number, tool, construction, and so on. the game introduces students to structure by asking them to build a sentence based on three photos. each photo shows a different situation that an object could be in. players may need to find or make words such as animal, part of the body, color, letter, number, tool, construction, and so on. always pay careful attention to spelling and grammar. not only will this enhance your writing, but it will also help you get better grades. use the "correct" button to check grammar, and choose "fix" to introduce suggestions for improvements. this program also offers a list of frequently misspelled words with correct forms. if you can grasp the basic concepts of grammar, you can go on to study grammar further. often, students have trouble using commas effectively in formal writing. you can see many examples of this in the above-displayed screens. put the comma at the end of a list only if it is necessary. if it is not needed, do not use a comma.

national council of teachers of english developed the english learner content standards. the purpose of these standards is to ensure that all students have access to the same kinds of content they can use to develop their knowledge and skills. i recommend looking at them in order to see what is covered in your grade level. you can find the standards for all grade levels in the resources below. to see more on differentiation for english language learners, you can check out this article . this is the third installment of a series where i talk about how to create an effective lesson plan. in order to make sure you have a lesson plan that is effective, you need to know your instructional level and the reasons for it. both of these can be determined by going through the essential guide to planning instructional activities. however, you can also use this guide as the basis of how you differentiate. make sure your lesson is based on your students' goals. each goal should have a clear, measurable measure, at the least. i have gone over some strategies for determining the goals for your students. however, in order for them to understand and master your instruction, they need to know what the subject of the activity is and what the concept is. they need to understand the learning targets you have assigned for them. create a lesson plan that includes a goal for each student's learning, and make sure that you include a clear understanding of the goal. you will want to create specific objectives for each step in your lesson so your students can follow the steps along the way. this is a common strategy used by teachers who teach to the test. 5ec8ef588b
