Although a good deal of the industry is staying relatively quiet during this time, some of the big players are getting into the game. Rupert Murdoch's News Corp is launching FoxPass for streaming (and if you can swing it, a small monthly fee subscription to Hulu). NBC Universal has a streaming service called Peacock starting in the fall. And Disney had a big 2016 acquisition, Maker Studios, that will launch a powerful new streaming platform. The buyout of Maker Studios has been good for both parties so far. The maker originally made popular YouTube videos, and Disney now owns a large YouTube platform, giving Disney access to some of the best content creators on the platform. Maker Studios has been profitable, and its new platform Disneydesigned to be very SEO friendly, will jumpstart its own YouTube efforts.

Fandango, which was often at the forefront of technology and offering live-streaming from the movie theatres, has been silent for some time. I filled out a questionnaire online and completely forgot about it. Two weeks ago I was notified of winning an iPhone 12. I've been all over the world searching, but all the people I contacted pleaded ignorance. I still get notifications that the package has arrived and it's fully paid. I have an order no. and a tracking code. I filled out forms online but as soon as I get to supplying further details regarding shipping and delivery, the page gets lost. I haven't paid anything."

German film promoter Constantin Film Group has filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy and appointed financial restructuring advisors citing Covid-19 triggered liquidity problems and negative market conditions in the German market. The Group is struggling to find the money to pay cinemas for tickets for a range of films due to the ongoing outbreak of coronavirus (COVID-19), affecting the release of "I Am Someones Monster", "With You" and "Tenet". They can also no longer sell tickets for shows they don't own and they must wait for cinemas to pay. (The Austrian film "Summer Lovers" aka "Tuerckische Sommerfreunde") According to German newspaper Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung (FAZ) Constantin Film's management does not expect its Chapter 11 filing to significantly alter its financial position, as the group has money reserves of around 160 million euros (US$174.7 million) and also has the support of private creditors. The Group, which is responsible for the distribution of many blockbuster films, including "Die Hard", "Die Hard 2", "Batman Begins", "Shrek", "Star Wars", "Harry Potter", "Mission: Impossible", and "Night at the Museum", is expected to restructure its debt and take out a short-term loan. According to the company's filings Constantin Film's and its subsidiaries' revenues stood at 1.7 billion euros in 2019 (US$1.87 billion), down nearly 30% compared with 2018. The group says it was hit by the COVID-19 pandemic, the ongoing US-China trade dispute and negative market conditions, when demand for films fell. The company said it could not get hold of the movie theatres to buy tickets in the German market, which has reportedly been hit hard by the outbreak and the resulting economic slowdown.
