Google Launches for iOS - kthakore ===== simias I know you can't really see the source in that article but the normal user won't be able to install this app (unless his phone is jailbroken) Google is doing one thing very well, they are integrating their applications with the main mobile OS which gives you far more flexibility and much richer usability than any other OS provider (imo). Unless your mobile OS is closed source and you have a vendor lock-in that makes you the monopoly. I'm sure they got their engineers to cut their workdays so they could add this simple feature, but that's not something you should expect from a tiny startup. Just because they're a startup that doesn't mean they're a bunch of idiots who have no experience building their own applications and can't see the benefits of this sort of thing. ~~~ jebblue I think Google is doing something right because it makes their platform one that is tied to you and your device. iOS is similar. It ties to you
